STORY

Maria is a plain old herbalist training diligently under the watchful gaze of her loving mentor.

Her skill in crafting items gets her within arm's reach of her goal of getting enough money to marry. But then, her mentor who she was supposed to be a happy couple with suddenly marries his pretty childhood friend!

“With your skills in crafting, you can just buy any man you want.”

After getting turned down with such cruel words, Maria resolves herself and declares:

“I’m gonna make a buttload of money and marry someoooooneeeee!!!”

What encounters are in store?

Earn, save, and marry.

A happy end awaits you ♪

CHARACTERS

Maria Scissorland

The main character; a highly skilled herbalist.

Because she is so dedicated to her research and her craft, she has almost no chances to get into contact with men.

The only man she's had a relationship with is her mentor. Without ever having done the deed, he broke up with her.

The items she makes are first-class, and fetch a high price.

Get to know five middle-aged and rugged men who are down on their luck! Which one will you marry on that special day? ♪

Samuel Double

CV: No Name

Although well-built, muscular, and a great warrior, he destroys his body with alcohol.

His main weapon is a great sword. However, it's currently being pawned. Has has so many tabs running with bars that he's on the verge of running dry.

Though he's not really a bad guy, he's still a drunkard of an old man, so there aren't many prospects for him. He can often be found sipping on booze at bars.

Ben Koo

CV: Shiraiwa Kazuma

A thief, and compulsive gambler.

His luck in anything related gambling is as exceptionally horrible as he is excellent in his other skillsets. The debt has piled up so much that he isn't even allowed into any casinos or gambling dens. In fact, his own life is already at risk.

A dagger and sling are his primary weapons. He often sits in dark corners of bars so that he doesn't stand out.

William Bloom

CV: Takeda Naoto

An elven ranger who is also a skilled user of the spirits. His main weapons are his mythril short sword and his bow.

Having been tricked into shouldering a debt from a complete stranger, he is always chased after by debt collectors. Also, he has a problematic tendency to just give money away whenever he sees anyone in need.

He can often be found in the adventurers' guild, looking for work.

Brian Starly CV. Sugigama Atsushi

A priest coming from fallen nobility. Though he grew up well, his family had lost all of its assets due to his father's debauchery.

Despite being absurdly poor, he can't help but show off. He dreams to one day buy back his family's estate, furnishings, and treasures.

His main weapon is a mace.

Often, he can be found in the adventurers' guild looking for work.

Walter Pleasant CV. KK

A necromancer dedicated to his work. His primary focus of research is to create zombies who retain their conscious reasoning. He has no interest in anything but his own research, so his social skills are terrible.

He has no sponsors so he is extremely poor. Because his research deals with raising the dead, he was kicked out of the sorcerers' academy, and so is unable to find a job. He can often be found rummaging around the garbage bins around town.

This is a simplified, all-ages version of an erotic otome visual novel (you can find the 18+ version on Denpasoft store), about a talented herbalist in a small fantasy town, trying to find a husband after being dumped by her mentor. Still, it's not low-effort conversion with just h-scenes removed, but a general revamp, with a heavily modified and much gentler story. In the original game, the protagonist is arguably being abused by her lovers in most, if not every route, here everything is highly toned down and generally cute.

The game has an interesting, retro-inspired artstyle, which I personally liked a lot, although many people find it ugly, especially when it goes to male characters - they're all grizzled, middle-aged men and some of them look properly nasty. The protagonist is meant to be rather average, but I really like her design and personality - she's pretty behind her humble style and kind, but courageous and assertive whenever it's necessary. The bachelors are all shady types with huge issues, but they grow throughout their routes and become better people thanks to the aid the protagonist gives them. All arcs are rather linear and straightforward, but fun in their own ways. You can, BTW, romance all five of the bachelors in one playthrough, with no need to start over - I even think it's the game's canon that Maria ends with five husbands.

The game has simple dungeon crawling gameplay, to which the story progression is tied - you explore dungeons with one of the romanceable heroes as your bodyguard, earning money and finding potion ingredients. You then use all that to pay off heroes' debts, unlocking new story content with him, up to becoming a couple. The progression is pretty simple and if you invest heavily in one hero (there's no need to switch between them after taking each to a dungeon for the first time and unlocking their routes), after a few hours of gameplay he'll become virtually invincible. This, however, turns the whole game into a bit of a monotonous grind. With no time limit or real penalty for losing in a dungeon, it'll take only your patience and a basic understanding of the mechanics to farm enough money and unlock all the story (and yeah it does get pretty boring).

In the end, I still quite enjoyed this game - if you can see past its bizarre, smartphone aspect ratio and the aforementioned grind, it's a very pleasant distraction for one or two evenings. Not especially deep or involved, but fun and unusual enough to be worth experiencing. Also, the 18+ version always remains an option, allegedly featuring tougher gameplay and a much darker story. And either way, I recommend giving The Bell Chimes for Gold a chance, especially with the fandisk's translation successfully funded on Kickstarter.
